Editorial Review

Review

"Drawings are clearly the primary medium of communication by architects, but skill in using the written word is often essential to explain, justify, or persuade. How Architects Write illustrates different styles of writing for specific circumstances and, while there are books for architects on 'letter writing', 'report writing,' or 'thesis writing', no other single volume encompasses such a variety of examples with so thoughtful a commentary."

Sebastian Macmillan, Department of Architecture, University of Cambridge, UK

"How Architects Write is both a practical yet surprisingly poetic compliment to the way architects think. The relation in the mind between thinking in words and thinking in images is both subtle and elusive. Picture a red rose – the imagination can recall the color and the delicate complexity in the layering of petals, but only words can convey and give precision to the variable affect the rose has on the senses. And this is what an effective use of words can give to the creative process of the architect. It is the only critical means of defining and enhancing intention."

Alan Balfour, School of Architecture, Georgia Institute of Technology, USA

"It's hoped that the entire architectural community will welcome How Architects Write as a valuable textbook that has arrived in the nick of time."

Gordon S. Grice, NY Journal of Books

"It is an all encompassing book and first of its kind in this field."

Kunal Rakshit, Dept. of Architecture, Jadavpur University
